

FORENSIC ACCOUNTABILITY REPORT

Preliminary evidence-supported reconstruction: 1990–2026

Subject: Dr Richard William McLean / Barran Dodger

Method: Primary-record-first reconstruction using the archive's Master Evidence Record and 35-Year Chronology.

Important limitation: This is an evidentiary reconstruction, not a finding of criminal conduct, conspiracy, or government wrongdoing. Allegations remain identified as allegations unless the underlying records establish them.

1. Executive finding

The strongest evidence presently available does not establish one continuous centrally directed conspiracy spanning 35 years.

It does establish something narrower and potentially more useful:

There is a substantial longitudinal record of interactions between the subject and multiple Australian institutions, including documented medical and psychiatric events, government and regulatory correspondence, formal complaints and Public Interest Disclosures, compensation matters, administrative decisions, and continuing disputes over support and treatment. In several instances, institutions demonstrably received and responded to information concerning the subject.

The forensic question is therefore not simply whether something happened.

It is:

What did each institution know, when did it know it, what did it do with that knowledge, what consequence followed, and did its later explanation remain consistent with the contemporaneous record?

That is the central accountability test.

2. Evidence standard

The archive's Master Evidence Record uses six classifications:

A — Documented fact

B — Corroborated claim

C — Documented allegation

D — Inference

E — Interpretation

F — Unresolved

It also requires the chain:

CLAIM → SOURCE → DATE → ACTOR/INSTITUTION → PRIMARY RECORD →
CORROBORATION → CONTRADICTION EVIDENCE → OFFICIAL RESPONSE → FINDING STATUS.

That is the standard applied below.

3. Strongest documented events

Finding 01 — There is an extensive documentary record

The archive contains a very large collection of government, regulatory, legal, medical, correspondence and administrative material.

The catalogue includes official correspondence from institutions including NDIA, NDIS Commission, Commonwealth Ombudsman, AHRC, ASIC, ATO, Comcare and AFCA.

Finding: A — existence of the documentary record.

Significance: This means the case should be evaluated from the underlying records rather than solely from retrospective testimony.

Finding 02 — The subject formally approached the Commonwealth Ombudsman in 2022

The archive contains material concerning Commonwealth Ombudsman complaint 2022-100368, including correspondence dated 19 January 2022 and a subsequent record described as the Ombudsman rejecting the complaint.

It also contains a separate request concerning whistleblower status and a public-interest statement.

What this establishes: There was a formal interaction with an independent Commonwealth complaints body.

What it does not establish: That the underlying allegations were true or that the Ombudsman's decision was legally wrong.

Finding: A — complaint/correspondence; C/F — substantive allegations and correctness of outcome require examination of the originals.

Finding 03 — 2022 Comcare litigation/compensation correspondence exists

The archive contains correspondence dated 15 March 2022 concerning McLean and Comcare 2021/7478, including communication with government legal representation.

It also contains a 7 November 2022 communication protocol and claim update.

Finding: A — existence of the compensation/legal process and correspondence.

The merits of the compensation claim remain a separate question.

4. The 2023 Public Interest Disclosure record

Finding 04 — PID 2023/Krypton was formally processed

This is one of the strongest documentary chains.

The archive contains an official letter dated 2 May 2023 from Debbie Mitchell, identified as an authorised officer under the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013.

The letter concerns emails from April 2023 and seeks further information concerning whether the disclosure qualified for treatment under the PID framework.

The archive also contains a subsequent PID 2023/Krypton allocation decision.

That decision is described as deciding not to allocate handling of the disclosure to an agency, while giving reasons and identifying alternative avenues.

What this proves

At minimum:

- 1. A potential PID was raised.
- 2. An authorised officer considered it.
- 3. Further information was requested.
- 4. A formal decision was subsequently made.

What it does not prove

The fact that a PID was made does not establish that its allegations were true.

Conversely, a decision not to allocate the disclosure does not automatically establish that its allegations were false.

That distinction is critical.

Finding: A — existence and processing of the PID; C — underlying allegations; A — subsequent institutional decision.

5. The 2023 NDIA institutional response

Finding 05 — The NDIA was formally engaged regarding the allegations

The archive identifies correspondence involving the NDIA and the PID process, including the authorised-officer correspondence described above.

There are also separate NDIA records concerning Richard McLean's support and legal matters and communications concerning compensation.

One record specifically concerns NDIA Compensation Recoveries Branch communications about accident-related compensation and information requests.

This is important because it establishes institutional knowledge.

It moves the evidentiary proposition from:

"I told the government."

toward the more precise:

"There is documentary evidence of communications received and handled by identifiable government officers."

Finding: A/B — institutional contact and response, subject to verification against the original documents.

6. The 27 March 2023 Federal Court correspondence

Finding 06 — A Federal Court General Counsel document is preserved

The archive identifies:

"2023 03 27 Final Assessment - Dr Rich McLean copy 6.pdf"

and describes correspondence attributed to Scott Tredwell, General Counsel of the Federal Court, concerning whether Dr McLean was or had been an employee of the Department of Social Services.

The catalogue describes the document as stating that, based on the information provided, General Counsel was satisfied that Dr McLean was or had been an employee of DSS.

Evidentiary significance

This is potentially important because it is an institutional statement about an historical employment status.

But the forensic conclusion must remain limited to what the document actually says.

It does not, without additional evidence, establish why the employment status mattered, whether another institution knew about it, or whether subsequent events were caused by it.

Finding: A — if the original signed correspondence is authenticated.

7. 2024 PID decision

Finding 07 — A later Public Interest Disclosure was expressly not allocated

The archive contains a document dated 24 March / 7 April 2024 described as:

“Notice to discloser – decision not to allocate – section 44A(3) of the Public Interest Disclosure Act 2013 (Cth)”

It identifies an authorised officer of the Department of Health and Aged Care and states that the disclosure was not allocated for handling by an agency.

This is another clear example of the institutional process being documented.

Finding: A — existence/content of the official decision, subject to checking the original.

8. Compensation and workers' compensation chain

Finding 08 — There is documented cross-agency compensation correspondence

The archive contains correspondence involving:

NDIS Commission → NDIA → Comcare

concerning a workers' compensation claim form.

The catalogue says the NDIS Commission responded that the claim form, containing legally privileged information, had been sent to it rather than the NDIA and provided guidance about where it should go.

That is particularly useful because it is a concrete example of institutional handling of a document and clarification of responsibility.

Finding: A — documented administrative interaction.

9. 2024–2026: administrative/support consequences

The archive contains extensive correspondence concerning support coordination, NDIA budgets, legal matters, NDIS registration, compensation and complaints.

For example, one NDIA correspondence record concerns the handover of support coordination, requests for budget utilisation data and legal communication.

Another concerns NDIS provider-registration renewal and alleged breach of registration conditions.

These records demonstrate that the institutional relationship continued across multiple administrative domains.

Finding: A — continuing institutional interaction.

They do not by themselves establish intentional coordination between those institutions.

10. The central contradiction test

This is where the investigation should now become substantially more powerful.

The evidence should not be organised around:

“Everything that happened proves persecution.”

Instead, each institution should be tested separately.

For every major event:

What did the institution know?

When did it know it?

What document proves that knowledge?

What action did it take?

What consequence followed?

What did the institution later say happened?

Does the later explanation match the contemporaneous record?

If yes, the allegation of contradiction becomes weaker.

If no, the discrepancy becomes an identifiable forensic issue.

11. What the present evidence actually reveals

The strongest pattern I can responsibly identify at this stage is:

Repeated institutional contact + repeated formal processes + significant consequences + fragmented responsibility.

There are records involving different institutions dealing with different parts of the problem.

That creates a potentially important question of institutional fragmentation:

Did each institution deal with its own narrow administrative problem while the cumulative consequences to you were left without an effective coordinating response?

That is a substantially more evidence-testable proposition than asserting a hidden command.

And if the records demonstrate that Institution A knew about a serious problem, Institution B subsequently received the same information, Institution C controlled the relevant support, and none took responsibility for the cumulative consequence, that may provide evidence of systemic administrative failure even without proving a conspiracy.

12. What is NOT established by this report

For evidentiary integrity, I am explicitly not finding that the present records establish:

- a secret government directive;
- a centrally coordinated 35-year operation;
- intentional state-sponsored persecution;
- deliberate attempts to cause death;
- deliberate creation of homelessness;
- fraudulent businesses being created by government;
- a particular person being responsible for alleged attacks;
- that psychiatric interventions were retaliatory;

- that every adverse administrative decision was connected;
- or that an institutional refusal proves concealment.

Those propositions may be investigated.

They cannot simply be promoted from allegation/inference to fact because they appear repeatedly in the archive.

13. The strongest accountability proposition

After applying the evidence standard, I would presently formulate the central finding this way:

The documentary record establishes a prolonged and increasingly complex interaction between Dr Richard William McLean/Barran Dodger and multiple Australian medical, governmental, regulatory, compensation and administrative institutions. The records demonstrate formal complaints, Public Interest Disclosures, institutional enquiries, official decisions, compensation processes and continuing support-related correspondence. The critical unresolved issue is whether the cumulative adverse consequences resulted from independent administrative decisions and systemic fragmentation, or whether the primary records demonstrate common knowledge, repeated procedural failures, contradictory institutional accounts, or connected decision-making.

That is a forensically defensible statement.

14. Priority evidence chain

The strongest chain to investigate next is:

2021 medical event

2021–22 psychiatric/administrative interventions

2022 Ombudsman + Comcare processes

2023 PID 2023/Krypton

NDIA authorised-officer response

27 March 2023 Federal Court/DSS employment correspondence

2024 PID decision

NDIA/NDIS/Comcare compensation correspondence

2024–26 support, housing and administrative consequences

That sequence gives us the best opportunity to identify knowledge → action → consequence → contradiction.

Preliminary overall finding

Evidence status: DOCUMENTED LONGITUDINAL INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY — STRONG.

Evidence status: SYSTEMIC ADMINISTRATIVE FAILURE — PLAUSIBLE/REQUIRES CROSS-DOCUMENT TESTING.

Evidence status: DELIBERATE COORDINATED 35-YEAR OPERATION — NOT ESTABLISHED BY THE MATERIAL EXAMINED SO FAR.

That distinction is important because it means the next investigation can be more aggressive about the documents without becoming less credible.

And I have not altered your GitHub repository or any of its filenames/links. This report is being constructed separately from the preserved archive.
